SUICIDE IN A CHURCH.

Catherine Morrison Cut Her Throat in a Confessional

Was Found Bying in the Church of the Epiphany.

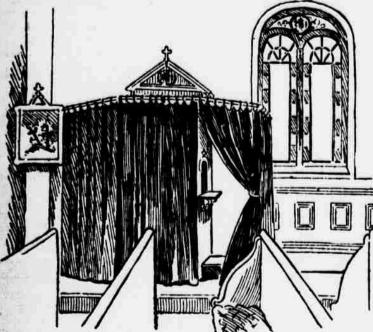

Well Educated and Given o Deeds of Charity.

There seems to have been no particuon why Catherine Morrison uld have selected the confessional of irch in which to commit suicide The religious fervor of which her friends we spoken since her death may have

The Confessional Where Miss Morrison Killed Herself.

No one saw this woman enter the confessional, and she disturbed no one until the praying women at the altar heard a groan which ended in a gurgle, followed by a falling fody. But in the solemn stillness of the church the groan porter saw her. She refused to let the seemed almost supernatural. One fright-contents from memory as follows:

After Coroner Meagher had granted a be removed to Mrs. Powers's house before—at least no one remembered to have seen her. She evidently went directly to one of the confessionals in the rear of the church.

The confessionals are small apartments, with curtained walls, in which is placed a low bench, upon which the visitor kneels while speaking to the father confessor, on the other side of the partition.

No one saw this woman enter the confessional, and she disturbed no one until ened woman ran to the door to find some one who had the courage to investigate and learn the cause of this noise.

She found Thomas Comiskey, the sexton's assistant, who hurried to the rear of the church.

"I think it came from there," said the woman, as she pointed to the nearest confessional.

"It think it came from there," said the woman, as she pointed to the nearest confessional.

The man went to the little room, and pulled back the curtains. He saw a dark, irregular heap upon the floor which looked like a hady, and when he had turned up the lights, a stream of blood flowing from a great seep cut in her neck was visible. A shining stee, razor blade which caught up the light and reflected it back, was the weapon she had used.

Comiskey, who saw the weapon she at used. Comiskey, who saw the weapon she shill alive, managed to get her out of the narrow confessional, and laid her upon the floor near the door. Then he sent a mesenger for Dr. Brady, of 365 East Twenty-third street, and a policeman who was notified sent for Ambulance Surgeon Hulmer, of Bellevue.

The doctors found the woman had first gashed her left wrist with a razor and then cut her throat. She died in a few minutes.

West Seventy-second street, it was said SILKS morning that he had passed a DRESS GOODS fairly comfortable night, and that his man, and the chances for his ultiing, his nurse said there was no im mediate danger. To make his condi tion more serious complications of long man, these fifteen years, or ever sinc he reached his majority. His father, Charles J.Osborne, amasses an immense fortune in Wall street, and his boy had been reared to the notion that his own caprice was his only guide that his own caprice was his only guide to conduct.

This father died in November, 1885, when Howell was twenty-six years old; but the son had already shown a disposition to scatter money to the four winds, and the will of the father, probated in March, 1886, left all his real estate, household effects and $500,000 in cash to his widow, Miriam A. Osborne, and $500,000 in trust, the income of which was to go to Howell.

Howell Osborne had spent much time in chasing after the gilded butterflies of the variety, burlesque and comic opera stage. He had married one of them, Alice Burville, an English girl appearing in "Billee Taylor," in this city. Osborne senior succeeded in separating the couple after a few months, and, it is said, paid $12,00 to the young actress.

After his father's death the son became a broker as partner of W. L. Stowe, and made some astounding deals, but retired, heavily in debt, to resume his old habits.

At one time h s marriage to Lillian Russell was announced. Then he formed an alliance with Fay Templeton, who had secured a Chicago divorce from Billy West, the minstrel, and for several years Osborne and Fay have, it is said, been faithful to each other.

Howeld, osborne, his widowed mother, died, and then it was thought Howell Osborne's creditors would get their due. But when Mrs. Osborn's will was opened it was found that she had carefuly tied up her great fortune of not less than $3,000,000, so that her som would get only an increase of his income, making his annual allowance about $75,000. But even this was made contingent on his not entering into marriage with any woman who had aver sung or danced or acted on the public stage. The sum of $300,000 was to go at Howeli's death to the issue of any marriage with any person never con-stage. The sum of $100,000 was to go at Howeli's death to the issue of any marriage with any person never connected with the stage.

Osborne himself once said that he had given $60,000 worth of diamonds to Fay Templeton, who was a siender, sprightly Fay when she first met Osborne, but is new a matronly woman.

The stories of Osborne's adventures are startling. Once he admired Billee Barlow when singing in "Les Manteux Noirs" at the Standard Theatre. He saw her from a box, and sent an invitation to her to sup with him that night hat Parker's. Then he ordered a $150 wupper at Parker's and waited.

Supper got cold. Then a note came signed by E. M. Stuart. Miss Barlow's manager, saying that as his wife had not the pleasure of Mr. Osborne's acquaintance, the note of invitation must have been intended for some one else of a similar name.

The spendthrift never flinched when these stories of his escapades were told. He seemed to be proud of them. He was a "goe'l thing" to a lot of people the world ever.

Mgr. Sat Ili arrived in this city from Washington yesterday afternoon, accompanied by Father Bander, of the Sixth lions to his young cousin were so conspicuous as to cause remark among the neighbors.

Thursday morning Alice took her basket of luncheon and started to the village school, returning to her home the usual time. The next morning when Mrs. Lyman reminded Alice that it was time to get ready for school, she was surprised with the reply.

"My school days are over. I'm a married woman."

Alice told how she had driven with her cousin the day before to Portland, to where he secured a marriage license from the Town Clerk upon his affidavit to that Alice was of age. They then went to the residence of Parson E. W. Goodler and were married.

Mrs. Lyman discharged the bridestrome to Portland, where she threatten the treather to the residence of Durham and thence to Portland, where she threatten ened the parson with vengeance. The preacher admitted that the bride looked strome statements unhesitatingly.

William Rich declares he will claim his child-wife by legal process, if other means fail. Mrs. Rich retorts that if he wants law he can get any quantity of it.
